Oil company agrees to clean up underground gasoline spill

By David Weller

Tesoro Refining Company has submitted a plan to the state Water Quality Control Board (WQCB) to clean up gasoline and diesel contamination at their site on South River Road and the surrounding area.

Although submitting a clean-up plan, the company has not admitted responsibility for the spill, according to Polly Lowry, an official for the WQCB.

A spokesperson for Tesoro was not available for comment.

The area affected by the contamination extends from Tesoro's property on South River Road to about 100 feet west of Jefferson Blvd. From north to south, the affected area runs from Circle Street to 17th Street.

The polluted area was discovered by the city while laying a pipeline along Jefferson Blvd several years ago. The city immediately turned the matter over to the state.

No one has been able to determine how much fuel was spilled, or how long it has been in the groundwater. It could have been caused by a single spill or by a number of spills over a period of time, according to Lowry.

State investigators believe they know the extent of the pollution in the shallow water table, but not in the lower water table. They do not believe that the pollution has gotten into the deep water channel, but they say they cannot be sure.

The cleanup procedure submitted to the state includes a well to be put on the affected area above the water table. Ground water would be pumped out, creating a vacuum. Because the hydrocarbon molecules are volatile, the vacuum would cause them to vaporize, at which time they can be extracted from the ground.

Because the plan has only recently been submitted to state officials, no agreement has been reached and no date has been set to begin the clean-up.

Council to take another vote

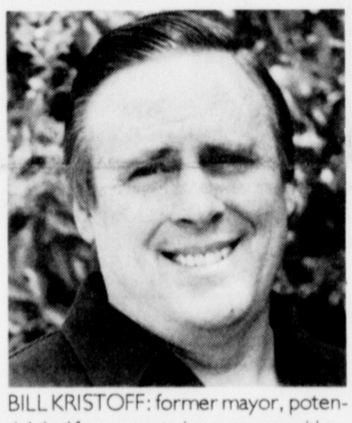
■ Mayor Tuttle wishes for a re-vote on who will be city's vice mayor; hopes to fight appearances that she may have cut short discussion

By Steve Marschke

Greg Potnick could be the shortest-term vice mayor in West Sacramento history.

The city councilman, elected to the "mayor pro tem" position July 8 on a 3-2 vote, will see that vote re-created this evening, after new mayor Cindy Tuttle said she wanted to make sure everyone was satisfied with the fairness of the process.

"There's been some concern raised that perhaps the 'motion' procedure for the mayor pro tem vote was faulty, and that perhaps I cut some people off during the discussion," she said Tuesday. "I felt the procedure was correct, but I have made it a point in the past to promise everyone I would make sure they're heard. So I requested that city staff put this on the agenda again."



BILL KRISTOFF: former mayor, potential rival for current vice mayor position.

Tuttle was elected as the new mayor of West Sacramento last week on a unanimous vote, following a council tradition of giving the honor to the one who had previously served as vice mayor.

The council has also had a tradition of rotating the vice mayor's post to a junior member.

But the new council -- seated at a special meeting July 8 -- has no new members. Both incumbents who were up for re-election successfully defended their seats in June, and only member Roland Hensley has not yet served as vice mayor or mayor.

Hensley reportedly had made it known he was not interested in the posts.

Workers catch theft suspects

■ Two male suspects arrested by citizens after attempt to steal pickup truck on Duluth St.

By Steve Marschke

Tim Conners had already had his Dodge pickup truck stolen once, and when he heard someone start the engine while it was parked nearby on Duluth St. last Friday morning, he did what any red-blooded American male would do.

He dove through the passenger window.

Which was closed.

And as the suspected thieves fought with him and managed to drive "15 or 20 feet" with Conners bloodied by glass and hanging through the window, Conners attempted to pummel them into submission.

The two suspects then took off on foot, and Conners called for help from workers at nearby Alling Works, who joined in the foot pursuit.

Also joining in was a UPS driver out doing his route.

"The driver bailed," explained Conners, who works for Sun Cal Construction. "Then the passenger got away with his shirt still in my hands."

Chased down the street, the pair of suspects found a posse on their tail.

"One guy jumped a fence," said Conners. "We caught the other guy there."

The citizens, including worker Joe Carter, caught the other suspect eventually as well.

Now in custody are Jack Stuart, a 21-year old West Sacramento man, and a 16-year old boy from Sacramento who was not identified by police due to his age. Both will be charged with grand theft.

Conners, who was himself bruised and cut by his encounter with the pickup's window, declined to comment on whether either of the suspects required medical attention after their capture by the makeshift posse.

The shirt Conners happened to be wearing last Friday. . .

A police department spokesman said that he did not know if the pair needed a visit to the hospital after they were picked up.

But Conners said he hopes the events of last Friday will send a message to criminals:

"There will be no stealing on Duluth Street," he said.

Tim Conners, still bandaged and bloody from an adventure with would-be auto thieves, stands with his recovered pickup truck a few hours after the incident.

Port cranks up ad campaign

By David Weller

The Port of Sacramento is in the middle of a six-week, low-key advertising campaign running from mid-June through the end of July.

The campaign consists of five billboards featuring the slogan, "The Port of Sacramento -- because some stuff won't fax," and radio ads in which an actor interviews dock workers about the operations at the port. Prominent in the radio ad is a statement about the possibility of bringing in bigger ships in the future.

Port Director Mike Vernon said the campaign is not related to the proposed tax assessment district, because final consideration for the district is still several months away.

The ads are being run as part of a general effort to make the port more visible to the community. "The port is not well understood in the Sacramento area," said Vernon. Citing budgetary constraints, he went on to say that the port has had to reduce its community outreach programs in the last few years.

"It was just a good time to do it. It's been a good year and good things are coming down the pike in the next three to six months," he said. Vernon would not elaborate on expected future increases in business because deals are still being made.

Among the new cargos the port has added this year are fishmeal from Peru, barley, grain, and logs from New Zealand.

In response to recent public comments about the port's business operations made by Port Commissioner Vickie Bingham, Vernon accused Bingham of not coming directly to the commission or to port management with her complaints.

"Vickie Bingham has not raised any issues with the commission or with me. It is very difficult to respond when we don't know what her complaints are. I think it's irresponsible," Vernon said.

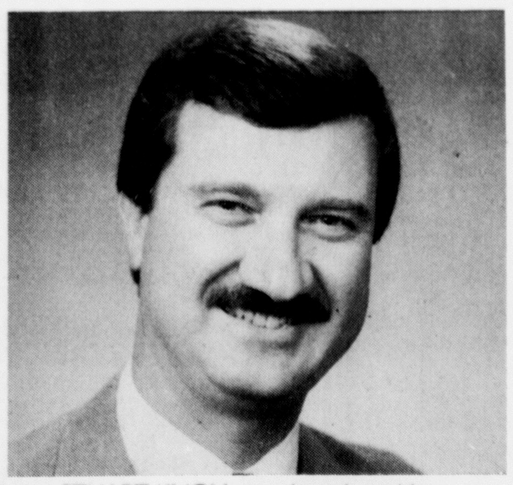
Bingham filed a complaint with the Sacramento County Grand Jury about "bad business practices" at the port. She has refused to tell the News-Ledger what business practices are included in the complaint.

At a Port Commission meeting last week, she declined to even confirm that she had filed the complaint.

Bingham has publicly questioned the constitutionality of the proposed tax assessment district and the wisdom of a proposal for the port to file suit against itself to test the legality of the assessment.

Vernon said that the assessment district is not a constitutional issue because it is not mentioned in the state constitution. The port's only concern about legality is that the proposal conform with the criteria set up by state law.

In order to ensure that the port has designed the assessment district legally, they would file a "validation suit" against themselves. "That would preclude someone else coming along and filing suit months down the road," Vernon said.



STUART KNOX, new board president

New school board

Two recently elected members of the Washington Unified School District Board of Trustees were seated for the first time last Thursday. The new board chose continuing member Stuart Knox as its new president, and Pat Flint as vice president.

New members Ardeene Westvik and Nancy Thompson-Candee were elected in the June ballot, defeating former president Hal Williams and a host of other candidates for seats on the five member school board.

The board also took action to change its meeting times. The board will now move its meetings to Tuesday evenings, instead of the previous Thursday evening schedule.

Man pulled from river Friday identified

By Steve Marschke

The Yolo County Coroner's office yesterday identified the body of a man pulled from the Sacramento River near Miller Park on Friday.

The coroner's office believes him to be Mohammed Ali Wareh, 38, a Sacramento resident who had been missing since 1994. His cause of death is still undetermined.

"He was found last Friday by a boater at about 8:30 a.m.," said Lt. Ron Moore of the West Sacramento Police Dept. "We're still investigating. There's no immediately apparent cause of death."

Another burglary in Broderick

By Steve Marschke

Daylight burglaries in Broderick (northeastern area of West Sacramento) are apparently continuing, said Lt. Ron Moore of the West Sacramento Police Department.

"We had another daylight burglary in the area of Arthur Dr. last week," he commented.

"Witnesses saw two males carrying pillowcases and riding bicycles in the area of the burglary. It was a vacant house. Two days later, the people came home and discovered the burglary."

Moore said the suspects probably gained access to the house by hopping a back fence. He added that the police have arrested several people during their investigation of the crimes, but none has specifically been charged with the burglaries.

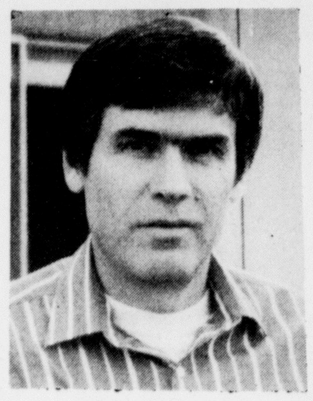
Police did not have a good description of the suspects in the Arthur burglary, he said. But one was said to be wearing a black sweatshirt and dark pants, while the other was wearing a white shirt and camel-colored pants.

Other details were unknown.

Meanwhile, no new burglaries have been reported in the Davis Rd. area of Southport, said Moore, and investigators are continuing to work on solving several recent crimes there.

Anniversaries: when a guy doesn't know what to get

My Back Pages



By Daryl Fisher

Today is my 20th wedding anniversary. That means I only have a few hours left to figure out what gift I should get for my wife. Gift giving has always been a big problem for me. Not only do I usually forget important dates like birthdays and anniversaries, I also have this unique talent for buying people I care about things they absolutely hate. Anyway, hoping not to screw it up yet again this year, I took my wife aside earlier this morning and matter-of-factly asked, "So, what would you like me to get you for your anniversary?"

"Why do you do this to me every year?" she asked, obviously annoyed.

"Do what?"

"Ask me what I want for our anniversary. That's not very romantic, you know. You're supposed to figure it out for yourself--not ask me."

"But the last time I did that, I got you that maroon and white jacket you hated -- remember?"

"I didn't hate the jacket, Dary l-- I just wasn't thrilled with that bright yellow blouse you got to go with it."

"Whatever -- all I know is that it would sure make things a lot easier if you would just tell me what you want and then I'll go downtown or somewhere and see if I can find it."

"I'll tell you what I'll do," she said, taking pity on me, "I'll give you a list of the traditional gifts that husbands get their wives on their wedding anniversary."

"Such a thing actually exists?" I asked, shocked.

"Of course it does -- you can usually find it on most Hallmark calendars -- I think I have one in the bedroom."

"You're kidding?" I said. "You mean that all these years I've been giving you lousy gifts, there was a list that tells guys how to do it right?"

"You haven't always given me lousy gifts," she said, trying to cheer me up.

"Name one you actually liked?"

"Well," she finally said after giving my question a good thirty seconds of deep thought, "you did give me a watch I liked on our eighth anniversary."

"See what I mean?" I said. "One year out of twenty. Why don't you just tell me what you want -- please?"

"Let's give the list a try, okay?" she said, heading towards the bedroom. "Come on -- it'll be fun."

The forward to "The List of Traditional Wedding Gifts" explained that, "The yearly anniversary of the day two persons were married is often an occasion for celebration and gift giving and in the United States, each anniversary gradually has come to have a name of its own." As I read on, I quickly came to the conclusion that the poor fool who came up with this silly idea is no longer with us, having undoubtedly been strung up by his thumbs for giving his outraged wife one of the stupid things on his list.

For instance, did you know that on one's first wedding anniversary, husbands are supposed to get their wife something made out of paper? Right. And then on the third, you're supposed to get her some fruit or maybe a book. And it gets better -- listen to this; on your fifth wedding anniversary, you're supposed to give your wife something made out of wood -- like maybe a duck decoy or something, I guess. Anniversary number six is candy and seven is straw -- of all things. But the one that really made me laugh was number eight -- pottery. Now I have a friend who has just celebrated her eighth wedding anniversary, and I know for a fact that if her beloved husband had brought her home a pot, she would have given serious consideration to braining him with it.

Anyway, it would appear that the longer one stays married, the better the gifts get. If a woman can hang in there past ten years -- when guys are supposed to get their mates something made out of tin -- then things start looking up. Wives get silk and fine linen on number twelve, crystal on number fifteen, china on number twenty, silver on twenty-five, pearls on number thirty, rubies or emeralds on number forty, gold on number fifty, and then diamonds on numbers sixty, seventy, and seventy-five, respectively.

"The lists says I'm supposed to get you a dish," I explained to my wife.

"What?"

"Look for yourself," I said, handing her the list. "It says china -- not a dish."

"So what do they make out of china except dishes?" I asked.

"I don't really like china anyway," she said, looking down towards the bottom of the list where all the diamonds hang out.

"How do you feel about pottery?" I quickly asked.

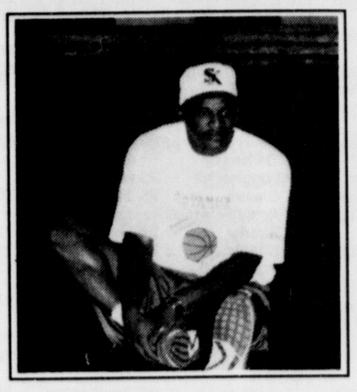
Pro players, coaches staff camp

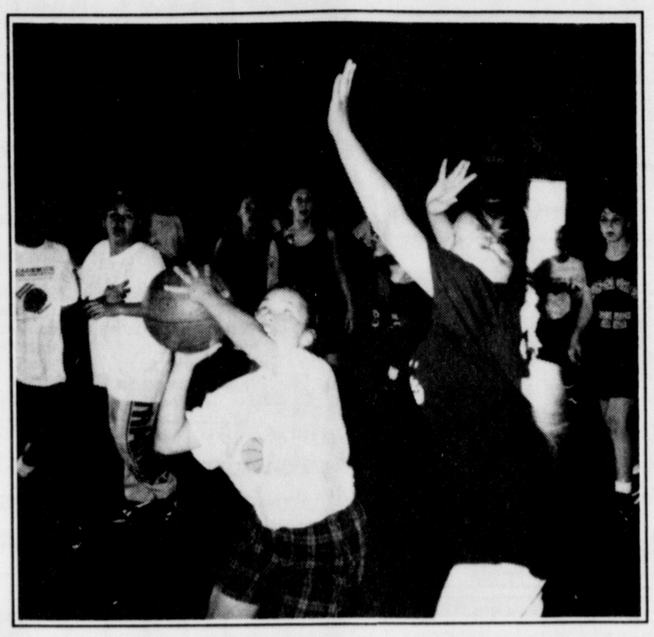
Approximately 50 youths from across Yolo County participated in a three-day youth basketball camp held at River City High School between July 13 and 15. Coaches from area schools, including River City High School and Golden State Middle School, are providing basketball coaching, drilling and training to youths ages 14 through 18, with a little help from the Sacramento Kings and the NBA.

NBA coach-turned-official Tommy Nunez of Phoenix, Arizona, led the camp, along with assistance from Sacramento Kings players Duane Causwell, Labradford Smith and Mike Peplowski. The Sacramento Kings are a major sponsor of the camp.

According to Adrian Torres, recreational supervisor for West Sacramento Parks and Community Services and local coordinator of the camp, "the coaches and professionals are covering all aspects of basketball with the kids, from drills in pivoting, passing and dribbling to training techniques that help players to achieve top fitness levels."

Of the camp attendees, 37 were residents of West Sacramento.





50 young people -- including 37 from West Sacramento -- attended a basketball clinic last week hosted by the Sacramento Kings and others.

The three-day camp covered fitness and basketball fundamentals.

The World Cup ended with a shootout as Brazil and Italy played to a 0-0 tie included 30 minutes of overtime.

The 94,194 in attendance at the Rose Bowl watched Brazil's 3-2 victory over Italy. brazil became the first four-time champions, hitting three of its penalty kicks, while the two Italian stars -- Robert Baggio and Franco Baresi -- missed theirs.

The title was also Brazil's first in 24 years. Also, it was the first time a penalty kick shootout was used to determine the winner in the final game. FIFA, the governing body in world soccer, said changes would be made to the overtime system by the 1988 World Cup in France. The next tournament will expand to 32 teams instead of 24.

More than 3.5 million spectators attended the 52 games, shattering the World Cup attendance mark of 2.5 million set in Italy four years ago. U.S. television ratings drew record numbers and the World Cup Organizing Committee finished with a profit of more than $20 million earmarked for U.S. youth and developmental soccer programs.

The San Francisco Giants (44-50) are on a roll, winning nine games in a row and closing in on the second place Rockies and cutting the Dodgers' lead to four games. Darryl Strawberry and Barry Bonds are on a hot streak. The Giants have not lost a game since Mr. Strawberry joined the team. The A's (40-52) are five games out of first place, trailing Texas, but are playing good baseball.

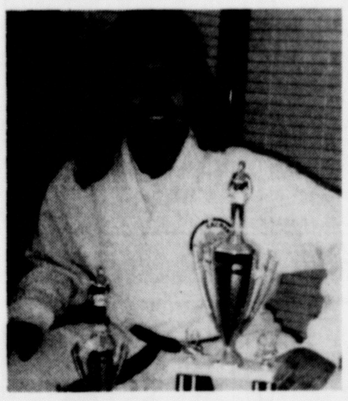
The baseball season is finally getting interesting and the baseball players' union rejected the owners' salary-cap proposal, moving closer to a strike in August!

In a season that has a new playoff system, it makes me sad that the two sides are talking strike, especially with young stars like Jr. Griffey, matt Williams and Frank Thomas chasing Roger Maris' record of 61 home runs in a season.

How do you explain to your 7-year old son that they're not playing baseball anymore because the players and team owners can't agree upon how many millions of dollars each player should be paid?

See ya next week!!!

Saldana named judo champion



Danelle Saldana, 15, of West Sacramento, participated in the United States Judo Federation's thirty-first annual junior, youth and team national championships held July 2 and 3. This year's tournament was hosted by the Aloha State, Hawaii, in the city of Hilo on the state's big island.

Welcoming this year's 740 participants from the United States, Canada, Mexico and Portugal to the state was Mr. John Waihee, governor of the state of Hawaii and mayor Stephan K. Yamashiro, county of Hawaii.

Danelle competed in two separate divisions. In the 106 pounds 15-year-old division, she placed first and received the title of 1994 Junior National Champion. In the second division, age 17-20 years, 106 pounds, she placed third.

Danelle currently attends Loretto High School and graduated from Our Lady of Grace in West Sacramento. She is a member of the Sacramento Judo Club, located at 2875 Fruitridge in Sacramento and trains under the tutelage of Sensei Mac Takeda.

Danelle's immediate plans are to represent the U.S. in an international judo tournament, hosted by the city of Fort Lauderdale, Florida, August 5 and 6.

OPINION

News-Ledger Editorial

Was 'tradition' at stake in recent political flap?

It will be interesting to see what the city council does tonight when it reconsiders its vote on who will be vice mayor (mayor pro tem) for the next year.

Councilman Greg Potnick was voted into the slot last week by a 3-2 vote, after new mayor Cindy Tuttle took over the gavel from Wes Beers.

The two votes in opposition came from Bill Kristoff and Roland Hensley, the council's present "minority." Hensley reportedly declined the office of mayor pro tem when inquiries were made in private, although he would have been the appropriate choice given the seven-year old city's "tradition" of rotating the office to junior members.

Hensley was the only member of the council who had not yet sat in the mayor or vice mayor's seat.

Kristoff would have been the "genteel" choice after Hensley declined. He is the council member who has been away from the mayor's and vice mayor's posts the longest.

But claims that the majority (Beers, Tuttle and Potnick) violated an established tradition when they nominated someone else are a bit farfetched.

Last Wednesday was the first time in the young city's history in which there were no junior council members waiting for their first crack at the mayor's or vice mayor's post, and there is no "tradition" of deciding what to do next.

And it is also not a "tradition" in West Sacramento for the council to give the honors to the highest vote-getters. Kristoff himself was part of a former council majority which overlooked that criterium when choosing its leaders -- a decision which delayed Potnick's term as mayor.

So although the council majority opted not to "take turns" with the vice mayor's position last week, it also did not break any city tradition.

The whole issue of who is or is not vice mayor is not, of course, a big deal. True, the council does have a tradition of moving its members from the vice mayor's seat to the mayor's seat at the next term.

But the little flap now going on over the selection of Potnick over Kristoff really shows just how quiet and devoid of issues West Sacramento really is at the moment.

Oh, for the political fights of yesteryear -- such as a good, old-fashioned turf war over an industrial park or gaming casino. . .

Speaking of quiet:

You are just that, right now.

The letters to the editor which flooded into the News-Ledger during the June election campaign have slowed to but a trickle.

Yet, when folks from this office are performing their business around town, they are often asked some variation of the following question:

"Why don't you get some more letters to the editor in there? I'm tired of reading the same old people."

Well, the answer to that question is that you are the one who writes them.

Instead of complaining about those who do put pen to paper and get involved in their community, why not join them?

Sewage issue: open letter from mayor to grand jury

by Cindy Tuttle,
Mayor of West Sacramento

The City of West Sacramento is in receipt of the Grand Jury's report. The city will be preparing a full response to all of the issues and recommendations raised in the 1993-94 report in the near future, but I felt that the Grand Jury's Recommendation No. 93-12 should be responded to as soon as possible.

The recommendation was that the city contest the size of the fine issued by the Regional Water Quality Control Board (RWQCB). While the city does not disagree with some of the basic premises of this recommendation, there were many considerations in ultimately agreeing to pay the fine as outlined by the RWQCB. The city is pleased to hear that the Grand Jury took the time to attend the May 20 meeting, and, in fact, discerned what the city perceived to be some significant issues. It was only after a great deal of deliberation that the council agreed to pay the fine and thereby place this issue behind us. By this letter, it is my intention to share some of the thought processes used in making this determination.

While the city did share the Grand Jury's feelings that the amount of the fine appeared excessive, the legal advice received indicated that the RWQCB was acting within its discretionary authority provided by law. We were also advised that appealing or contesting the amount of the fine could expose the city to an increased fine. Legal counsel noted that a lengthy appeals process would result in further allocation of staff resources and money. Additionally, since the fine fell under the RWQCB's purview, the city lacked a good chance of success.

In summary, there were three main points to consider:

1. The city had failed to report tests conducted at the plant. This was acknowledged early on. These "failures to report" were, in fact, a violation of the Clean Water Act.
2. The Clean Water Act authorizes fines that could have been in excess of the amount imposed by the RWQCB. Therefore, the board was acting within its discretion.
3. A drawn out appeals process and the expenditures associated with it did not appear to be in the best interests of the city.

Like the Grand Jury, the city also wishes that these problems had been brought to its attention in a more timely manner so the issues could have been focused upon and addressed sooner. This would have benefited everyone. We acknowledge it would have also been desirable for us to have had more knowledge of the law regarding this issue. Continuing to argue with people with whom we had always worked well in the past was not in the city's best interest. The city desired to make the necessary improvements to the plant move forward in a positive, proactive manner.

I hope the above explanation provides you some level of understanding as to our decision-making process. I would also note that the city's decision had to be made by July 8, and we were unaware of the Grand Jury's thoughts until Monday, July 11. Upon receipt of your report, it was reassuring to know that others saw some of the issues as we did, but the decision had already been made.

Thank you, once again, for your careful scrutiny and attention to this matter. A full response on all of your recommendations will be forthcoming as soon as possible.

Making criminals - not crime - pay

by Assemblyman Tom Hannigan

"You can run, but you can't hide," goes the old saying.

But, in California, criminals can run and hide from their obligations to pay for the consequences of their acts. They are successfully avoiding paying the fines and penalties that help provide financial restitution to their victims.

The Franchise Tax Board estimates that uncollected criminal fines and penalties in California now approaches $500 million, which could be used to support counseling and legal help for crime victims. Overburdened city and county courts do not have the resources necessary to track down and collect these delinquent criminal fines.

It is a shame and a scandal that criminals have been so successful in avoiding their financial responsibility. Victims' restitution and assistance programs are woefully underfunded, and chronically "in the red," requiring emergency financial bailouts that are costly to all taxpayers.

I am carrying legislation to aggressively address this problem. The bill, AB 3343, would allow state tax authorities to use their existing powers to collect delinquent criminal fines.

Under AB 3343, delinquent criminal fines would be treated as though they were income tax liabilities, and the Franchise Tax Board would be allowed to use its income tax collection procedures, remedies, and information sources to track down the individuals who are ignoring their court imposed criminal fines.

As many delinquent taxpayers know, the Franchise Tax Board possesses many effective techniques to track down individuals and make them pay the back taxes and penalties they owe. I think it is eminently reasonable to have these powers of wage garnishment, and asset seizure imposed on criminals.

Honest and otherwise law abiding citizens who forget to pay a parking ticket have nothing to fear. My bill would not cover vehicle code violations such as parking, pedestrian, or bicycle offenses. AB 3343 also would only focus on court imposed criminal fines over $500.

I see no reason why we should be so hard on delinquent taxpayers, yet so easy on convicted criminals.

AB 3343 passed in the Assembly with unanimous bipartisan support. It recently passed a major hurdle in the senate when it cleared the senate judiciary committee.

The bill is now headed for a senate fiscal committee, and then on to the governor.

If signed, AB 3343 would make the old saying "You can run, but you can't hide" ring much truer.

Letters to the Editor

It is nice that we have our first woman mayor. However, during the process, the sleazy politics of West Sacramento once again reared its ugly head.

In selecting the mayor pro-tem, good ole Greg once again showed who has the power in our city government. Rather than follow the past practice of alternating the mayors among all the council members, Greg put himself in line to take over when Cindy Tuttle finishes her tenure as mayor. Informed sources state that Roland Hensley was not interested in the pro-tem position, which placed Bill Kristoff next in line. Unfortunately Potnick would not permit this to happen. Potnick was elected mayor pro-tem on a 3-2 vote.

I understand that when he once again becomes mayor, he will require the police officers to stand at attention and play "Hail to the Chief" when he enters the council chambers.

5 Named For Pools

Mrs. Marylea Reyner of West Sacramento has been selected to serve as general chairman of a citizens' committee to prepare plans for the construction of swimming pools at the Washington and James Marshall High Schools.

Mrs. Reyner, who played a key part in circulating petitions which resulted in the levying of an eight cent tax rate this year for swimming pool construction in the Washington Unified School District, accepted the general chairmanship at a public meeting held last Thursday evening in the West Acres School.

Mrs. Lucy Pope was named secretary.

The citizens' group also appointed three committee heads who will select volunteers to assist them. They are Harold Turner, construction; William Mitchell, financing; and Milton Lane, Jr., community use and maintenance.

Turner, an architect employed by the Sacramento firm of Barovetto and Thomas, and a member of the Yolo County Planning Commission, presented approximate costs of pools and other information relating to construction.

He pointed out that there would be some saving in construction costs if both pools could be built at the same time.

One West Sacramento boy received the highest award in the Boy Scout movement while another was promoted to the highest rank in a court of honor for members of Troop 282 held last Wednesday evening, September 29, at Camp Pollock. Tom Aceituno (right), the son of Mr. and Mrs. Manuel Aceituno of 1608 Norfolk Avenue, received the Eagle rank. Already an Eagle Scout, Rick Vale (right, above) was presented the Eagle Silver Palm during last week's honor court. Rick, the son of Mr. and Mrs. Walter Vale of 1513 Fernwood Street, is pictured with the two Tenderfoot candidates to whom he presented pins. They are (left to right) Mike Thompson and Timothy Allen. Zoning Violated

A warrant was scheduled to be issued yesterday for the arrest of a West Sacramento building wrecking firm owner to halt the use of a large Elkhorn Village tract as a dumping ground for wrecked buildings, logs, tree stumps and other materials.

In answer to an inquiry by the News-Ledger, Leslie E. McCready of West Sacramento, a member of the Yolo County Planning Commission, reported the warrant was to be issued for the arrest of Homer Arons of West Sacramento, owner-operator of the Arons Building Wrecking Company.

McCready said the warrant, charging Arons with violating the county zoning ordinance, would be issued at the request of County Planning Director Robert Peterson.

The decision to seek Arons' arrest followed numerous complaints by Elkhorn Village residents and business people and an inspection of the site by McCready early yesterday.

Business people complained the firm's trucks, operating at times around the clock during the past two months, have been creating large clouds of dust which settle both in the Elkhorn Village and West Sacramento shopping areas, depending on the direction of the prevailing winds.

The tract, about a quarter of a mile wide, is located opposite the Elkhorn Village shopping center and borders heavily traveled Sacramento Avenue and the Southern Pacific Railroad line.

The property is owned by Mrs. Samuel Hamburger of San Francisco.

McCready told the News-Ledger the violation was noticed early in September by a county planning department employee. Mrs. Hamburger was notified of the zoning ordinance violation in a letter sent to her by Peterson September 10. A second letter was addressed to Arons September 15 and Arons, McCready said, has failed to respond to Peterson's warning.

It is reported the building materials being deposited on the site are being hauled from Sacramento. They include logs and tree stumps and a large quantity of used brick which is being salvaged and stacked, apparently for sale.

Arons, who resides in Sacramento, operates his building wrecking firm at 4245 West Capitol Avenue in West Sacramento.

Board Tells News-Ledger It Cannot Enforce Law

Broderick's Sanitary District directors devoted most of last week's regular monthly meeting to a recent News-Ledger news report and concluded the discussion by adopting a motion addressed to this newspaper.

The motion, made by Walter Ecklund and seconded by John Reuter, states:

"That the newspaper (News-Ledger) be informed that this board has no enforcement powers in regard to any enactment heretofore made by the board."

Board Chairman Clarence Weiss later told the News-Ledger:

"Our board has no enforcement powers whatsoever."

In recent coverage of the board meetings, the News-Ledger reported the content of a letter from Yolo County District Attorney Thomas A. Purtell in which the board was asked to cooperate with the East Yolo Waste Disposal Company in enforcing the district's garbage collection ordinance.

Purtell said the complaints lodged by the contractor against individuals in the district who refuse to utilize his collection service "are so numerous that our office cannot hope to conduct criminal prosecutions in these matters."

The district attorney added:

"However, we would greatly appreciate it if your board would make it clear to the residents in your district that the ordinance is in effect and that they must comply with it. This support from you would be of great assistance to the contractor and should be forthcoming in that the ordinance was passed by your board."

The News-Ledger also reported the board failed, at its August meeting, to take action to enforce the ordinance because of a split vote on a motion directing the district's legal counsel, Attorney Rudolph Binsch, to prepare a letter which could be sent to residents informing them of the provisions of the ordinance.

The News-Ledger reported the motion failed to carry because the decisive vote, cast by Weiss, could not be counted inasmuch as he was sitting as chairman, and one board member refused to vote.

This account of the board's action was questioned and debated at length at last Wednesday night's meeting.

LATE BULLETINS

Mrs. Verdella Reid of Arcadia reported to the sheriff's East Yolo substation that clothing and other personal belongings, including a payroll check, cash and jewelry, valued at a total of more than $3500, was taken from her room at Hotel El Rancho sometime Wednesday morning.

The sheriff's East Yolo substation reported approximately $216 in cash was taken from Bloom's Shell Service Station sometime Wednesday night.

Held to Answer On Arson Charge

James Ronald Russell, 19, has been held to answer in the Yolo County Superior Court on a charge of arson following his preliminary hearing yesterday in the Washington Judicial District Court.

The preliminary hearing was conducted by Judge C. D. Archer of Knights Landing who presided in place of Judge Ralph W. Bonetti.

Judge Bonetti and Richard Courtney appeared yesterday as witnesses for the prosecution.

Russell is accused of setting a fire involving a storage shed at 400 D Street, Broderick, September 10. The structure was located on property owned by Judge Bonetti.

County Government Functions Outlined by Supervisor Combs

The functions of county government were outlined to members of the East Yolo Republican Women's Club in an address given at the club's August meeting by West Sacramento Supervisor S. W. (Sam) Combs, who represents the first (East Yolo) district on the Yolo County Board of Supervisors.

Following is the test of Combs' talk:

"County government in California embodies the ideas and efforts of many persons whose belief in its worthwhileness carried it through to completion. While many state governments steadily assume function traditionally regarded as county responsibilities, county government in California remains strong, vigorous, and -- close to the people.

"Every two years about half of the state's 298 supervisors must run for office. There is a continuing changeover in these elected officers, which means the county supervisors association of California membership is constantly changing. County government in California has received a valuable assist from numerous statewide county officer associations founded to promote mutual cooperation and understanding of all phases of the specific functions of local government which they represent.

"Each is dedicated to giving support and strength to local control, to uniform interpretation and application of the statutes, to sound legislation and higher standards of professional competence and ability. Constant efforts to achieve these objectives has led to improved efficiency and better service for the peoples of our counties.

"County government serves all of the approximately 17 million people in California by providing numerous services, including welfare and hospital benefits; county highways and bridges; superior, municipal and justice courts; recording property titles, marriages, birth certificates and death certificates; assessing property for tax purposes; aiding agriculture; providing public health protection; and general law enforcement, as well as many other services.

"Population has been increasing at a greater rate in the unincorporated areas, which are under county government, than has the population of incorporated cities.

"The boards of supervisors are responsible for general government in the county. Each supervisor represents and serves his district; the board passes ordinances and resolutions regulating personal conduct, and administers the county government through its authorized agents in cooperation with other elected county officers.

"In addition to these county-wide duties, the boards of supervisors have responsibility for creating special districts for a great many things, such as water conservation, mosquito abatement, sanitation, rural fire protection, and maintenance of cemeteries. The board of supervisors serves as governing board for many of these districts while other districts govern themselves.

"California's first counties were formed in 1850 by the state legislature, which had been directed by the constitution of 1948 to establish a system of county government as uniform as practicable. Twenty-seven counties were created, their boundaries defined, and county seats named. During the first fifty years of California statehood, state law gave to the counties practically all the functions of government that directly concerned the citizens. These included policing, trial of civil and criminal cases, keeping records of property boundaries, land transfers, marriages and the like, construction and maintenance of roads, keeping the poor, and assessment and collection of taxes, even state taxes.

"As population increased and industrialization proceeded in a number of areas, demands for new or improved services and regulatory functions arose. Reallocation of work between state and county followed. Development of automotive transportation, for example, caused a demand for a good paved highway and road system, an improvement which the counties did not have sufficient wealth to provide. Since 1909 the state has had a state highway system, first with the financial help of the counties and later practically alone. Into this highway system have been absorbed many miles of county roads. A similar development came about in financing for public relief, and in 1928 California established an old age pension system, which has been extended under the federal social security program. County officials carry on the administration but the state, under some federal supervision, controls the county's operations through detailed rules and regulations. Other function became those of the state or were subject to state administrative direction in a similar way. By the grant-in-aid device the state government assists the counties in the financing of many duties, at the same time subjecting them to a considerable amount of control. While the county necessarily has lost to the state in these respects, it has gained other functions. In recent years the legislature has greatly increased county powers to perform functions that have local interest. The constitution of the State of California provides for both general law and chartered counties. The structure of the general law counties, which type includes forty-seven of the fifty-eight California counties, is completely governed by statutes passed by the legislature. In each of the eleven charter counties the government, particularly organization, is based on an individual charter, although state law still prescribes a considerable amount of the details of function and procedure.

"To be eligible for county, district or judicial district office, a person must be, at the time of his election or appointment, at least twenty-one years of age, a citizen of the state, and an elector of the county or district in which the duties of the office are to be exercised. Additional qualifications are required of certain officials, such as judges, district attorney, etc.

"We have in our county two types of department heads, elected and appointed. Elected are auditor-controller, clerk-recorder, assessor, district attorney, treasurer-tax collector, sheriff-coroner, superior court judges, constables and supervisors. Appointed are county executive, department of communications, purchasing agent, county counsel, public defender, hospital administrator, hospital medical director, public health director, department of agriculture, department of public works, department of building inspection and planning director."

Incorporation Study Is Topic

The next regular luncheon meeting of the East Yolo Planning Council, to be held at Sambo's Pancake House, 1900 West Capitol Avenue, at noon Monday, will be devoted to the topic of "Incorporation Studies - Mechanics and Costs."

Donald E. Nemetz of San Francisco, western representative of the Public Administration Service, will be the speaker, President John Henderson announced.

Henderson said a cordial invitation to attend the meeting is extended to all persons interested in the possible incorporation of the East Yolo area. Council officers for 1965-66 will also be elected at the meeting, following the report of the nominating committee.

Will Address Yuba Convetion

Robert A. McCarroll, supervisor of 17 congregations of Jehovah's Witnesses in California Circuit #14, will be a key speaker at a circuit convention October 22, 23 and 24 in Yuba City at the Yuba-Sutter Fairgrounds.

During the three days he will speak on the "Right View of the Work Ahead" based on the Bible text at Philippians 1:9, 10 and "Love Gives No Cause for Stumbling." McCarroll regularly visits local congregations every four months.

The keynote address will be "What Does the Resurrection of the Dead Mean for You and Yours?" Sunday at 3:00 PM. A New York representative of the Watchtower Society, Arden B. Stutler, will deliver this. Saturday at 1:30 PM he will direct his attention especially to new ministers of Jehovah, who immediately following, will present themselves for baptism which symbolizes their dedication to God. "Dedication and Baptism" will be his subject.

Also scheduled on the program is Robert J. Schlegel, speaking opening night on "Children, Do You Love Life?" "Right View Toward Regular Service" will be discussed by Kenneth Smedstad, presiding minister of the Fair Oaks Congregation of Jehovah's Witnesses. Schlegel is the presiding minister of the West Sacramento congregation.

Twenty three ministers have been put in charge of as many departments, necessary to run the convention smoothly. Three of the more than twenty departments are: Volunteer Service, headed by Warren A. Henschel; Installation, headed by Walter E. Parr; and Cafeteria, headed by Norbert Matz. Several hundred volunteers will be needed to handle the attendance, expected to reach 1,800 on Sunday.

Multi-talented artist on exhibit at local library branch

by Betty Fairbairn Sokolich
Art Exhibit Chairperson
Friends of the Library

Susan Kelly-DeWitt is an artist who makes the invisible visible. For some artists painting is primarily a means of recording natural appearances but for others painting is an expression of life with its secret forces and mysteries. Through the media of Guoache, watercolor, and mixed media, Kelly-DeWitt created paintings that explore the explosive energies of Mankind. She grew up in Hawaii where at an early age she was influenced by the way the multi-cultures of the islands used art forms to express their feelings and ideas. Later when Kelly-DeWitt was artistic director of the Women's Wisdom Project (an arts empowerment program for homeless and low-income women), she became interested in African art and used ideas from that culture to motivate and inspire the participating women.

The Turner Library exhibit includes several painting influenced by the Akua Ba, an African fertility doll with its large head and small body with tattoo designs on the face body. Akua Ba #2 has a halo around its head and a central spiral in the middle of the small body. Dots and dashes and hand prints are used on several of the paintings to give a vivacious background for the central figure. The spontaneity of the brush work using bright, primary and secondary colors sometimes become, almost by accident, leaves or flowers to decorate the painting and relate to the fertility theme.

"The Rooster Signals the New Day," a mixed media painting, shows how the artist brings realization out of experimentation. Painters look for unfamiliar elements to appropriate for their own use translating the found element into a personal symbol.

"Pressing Up Against the Past" is an acrylic painting on paper using a dark brown background to accent the princess-like face pushing her hands against the "past" and the tensions of unresolved problems held over from another time. Kelly-DeWitt uses hand prints to express and decorate her paintings.

Several years ago, a friend gave Kelly-DeWitt a black Madonna sculpture which became a frequent inspiration for her paintings. "Black Madonna" #4 show a strong, compassionate face. Metallic paint is used to accent the vitality of the Madonna. Black Madonna #1 was the first in the series and the small but monumental image is surrounded by a spiritual blue background with nine red suns floating around her head.

"Healing Hands" uses bright colors dominated by the healing color of yellow. A visitor at the exhibit commented that, as a masseuse, she could really relate to the concept of the healing hands.

The artist is talented in other fields such as writing, sculpture, several of her poems have been published in poetry anthologies and in magazines such as Poetry, New Letters, Nimrod, and Prairie Schooner. She has received awards from Stanford University and a Bazzanella Literary Award for short fiction from CSU.

"What She Saw" is one of her sculptures. The clay slab construction of the large head and small body has one eye seeing while the other is tightly closed, thick eyebrows are guardians of the eyes. The flowers are decorative and the primitive cross-like form hangs around her neck as a protector.

The other paintings are fun to see and recognize the simplified forms that are used to express the artists vitality through the surge of lines, dot, and dashes that register the artist's hand, its impulses and intentions.

The reception for the artist was held on July 8. The exhibit can be viewed during library hours through July and is sponsored by the Friends of the Library.

So outgoing mayor Wes Beers nominated Potnick, who had previously served in both capacities - as had both of the other two choices, Beers and Bill Kristoff.

Before a vote could be taken on Potnick, Hensley then nominated Kristoff for the post. But Tuttle, requested a vote on the motion already on the floor, and Potnick was elected, with Hensley and Kristoff dissenting.

"It's fully discretionary to the mayor," Potnick later said. "There are different kinds of parliamentary procedure for this. The impression was that once a motion went to the floor, it had to be voted on. The other way is to open all the nominations at once and then close them with a motion and a second, and then vote."

Potnick said that Kristoff, too, had initially indicated he was not interested in the vice mayor's post this year.

"But once the word was out that I would accept the nomination, Bill had a rekindling of interest," he added.

Greg Potnick with Mayor Cindy Tuttle

Kristoff could not be reached for comment on the matter.

Potnick said he would be satisfied with tonight's vote either way it went.

"If I'm nominated, I will accept," he said.

The matter is made more interesting -- and perhaps more emotional to some -- because of the political shape of the council.

Kristoff is the last remaining member of the city council's old majority, which saw itself as "pro-growth" and "pro business" but was accused by its enemies of selling out to development interests.

Potnick often cast the lone dissenting vote on development issues when he was elected to serve on the council alongside this majority, and both Beers and Tuttle (who supported him in the July 8 vice mayor's vote) started their careers as political appointments of Potnick.

With their election to the council, Potnick's old minority gained the reins of power by 1992.

Seen by allies as being tuned into citizens' rights and careful growth, they are sometimes labelled by opponents as being "no-growthers."

The newest city councilman, Roland Hensley, sees his main purpose on the council as being to try to heal the rift with the city police officers, who are still operating without a labor contract. Hensley has two sons on the local police force.

Like Kristoff, he sometimes finds himself at odds with the Potnick-Beers-Tuttle majority.

Another factor may be that the council seats held by both Potnick and Kristoff (as well as Tuttle) are up for election in 1996. Since whoever serves as vice mayor during the coming year will (if tradition continues) serve as mayor during the 1995-96 year -- leading up to that campaign -- that person mayhave the advantage of running for re-election as the city's incumbent mayor.

City told to stop water discharging practice

By David Weller

The California Regional Water Quality Control Board notified the city of West Sacramento public works department in June that the drinking water treatment plant was illegally "discharging filter backwash into Lake Washington via a storm drain," according to Richard McHenry, an inspector for the Water Quality Control Board.

The violation did not affect the quality of the drinking water coming out of the plant, but did affect the quality of water going into Lake Washington at the Port of Sacramento.

Drinking water that comes from ground water is run through filters to clean it of particulates. Periodically, the plant cleans the filters by running water through them backward. The dirty water that results from cleaning the filters should have been diverted directly to the sewage treatment plant. Instead, the water plant was discharging it into a storm drain that comes out in Lake Washington. McHenry said that Larry Gossett of the city's department of public works notified his office by telephone within two days of the original complaint that the problem had been fixed. The state is still awaiting written confirmation.

Gossett was not able to comment in depth on the issue before the News-Ledger's deadline, but offered to provide documentation on the water issue in the near future.

Flood insurance break for West Sacramento

from the City of West Sacramento

West Sacramento has been designated as one of the few cities in the Sacramento Valley region to obtain federally-approved 100-year flood protection status, according to the Federal Emergency Management Agency (FEMA).

This designation, recognizing a community's ability to withstand a 100-year flood, is FEMA's standard by which it determines whether a city can issue building permits in flood risk areas and whether mandatory purchase of flood insurance will be required in the private sector.

"Currently, West Sacramento has the highest degree of flood protection of any community in the Sacramento Metropolitan area," said Joseph Loop, West Sacramento's city engineer. "This designation could mean substantial savings to our city's businesses and residents. Our 100-year flood protection status means that purchasing private flood insurance is now an option -- not a requirement."

West Sacramento received a letter from FEMA this week notifying the city it has met federal requirements for flood protection from a 100-year flood event.

U.S. Army Corps of Engineers (USCOE) studies conducted on flooding in the Sacramento area after the 1986 flood revealed that several levees throughout the region needed improvements. From 1990 through 1994, West Sacramento, which has 26 miles of levees, completed $10 million in levee improvements projects funded by the USCOE, the city and reclamation districts 537 and 900.

U.S. Congress has also approved funding for the West Sacramento project, a $20 million construction project which will further improve city flood protection by raising and broadening levees along the Sacramento and Yolo bypasses. The federal government will fund 75 percent of the cost; the State of California and the city's flood control agency will share the remaining 25 percent. When completed, the levee system improvements will provide between 200 and 400 year flood protection for West Sacramento.

Pending release of funding from the federal government, levee construction is scheduled to begin in October 1995.
